

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of journalistic dereliction of duty.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. It is their responsibility to report facts of campaigns and local and national events of note, not to require stations to air propaganda pieces produced by campaign contributors.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
